Orthodox Relations with the World Council of Churches

Justice leads to peace, and vice versa. For us younger Russian bishops, too, this is difficult to understand, because we did not live in that epoch. The delegation of the Jerusalem Patriarchate in Porto Alegre was headed by an archbishop and actively participated in the work of the Assembly.

Kevorkian confirmed that the correspondence to the NCC is being prepared.

For a creative Orthodox

In fact, Nairobi described conciliar fellowship both as the final goal which the ecumenical movement has set before it and as a way to reach that goal. This was how: a bishop from Russia would travel to a WCC event, and, at the direction of the state, would make the necessary statements on international matters. The extraordinary practice of shared communion has been carried on, at various critical points of recent history, in some parts of the world, and is occasionally carried on today.

Orthodox Pre

They specifically emphasized the indissoluble bond of the correct faith with communion in the Mysteries. For instance, on evening there is an Orthodox vespers service, the following morning, an Anglican matins, etc.

Orthodox Relations with the World Council of Churches

It is extraordinary and shameful that the WCC pays so little if any attention to the plight of the Christian communities in the Moslem lands, where they are being exterminated eg Syria, Iraq, Turkey, Egypt, etc, etc.

The Orthodox Churches & the World Council of Churches by Peter Boutenoff

Since all the local churches in Zimbabwe are profoundly homophobic, this requirement was impossible to meet. What is there to talk about then? While many felt that this council produced no tangible results, it was clearly evident that the new council format and the tone of deliberations and resolutions called for increased mutual accountability, greater openness in communication at all levels of the Church, as well as a stronger commitment to the spirit of conciliarity which must carry the Church from council to council. It would seem that main fears can be summarized as follows: participation in the work of the WCC could entail a digression from the norms of the Orthodox faith and would harm the Orthodox ecclesiology.

By this method, Metropolitan Nikodim was able to preserve the episcopate of the Church in an era when the authorities preferred to close vacant sees or keep very old bishops on them who were unable to resist the pressure of militant atheism. It comprises representatives of two major confessional traditions of the WCC.
