Due to this situation it was necessary to develop models including variables about trade and relations among countries. The second conducts a series of case studies that cut across the wide variability of ritual public takings in late-capitalism. It did so for self-interest, for the benefit of the Communist Party of China, specifically its leaders' strategic objective, which was to demonstrate influence in the world, that is, power in international politics.

In a climate of enhanced global competition, attention for economic diplomacy has substantially grown, as much in the West as in other parts of the world. This collection of essays, written by scholars and activists, explores the interaction between African and Chinese nonstate actors and argues that the future of Africa-China relations rests on including such voices if a robust and vibrant engagement and a meaningful relationship are to be sustained. They assess the development of so-called critical IPE and interrogate whether the theoretical foundations it was built upon have reached their potential.
