The letter, known as the Plannck I edition, was from the library between 1985 and 1988. Washington, with great difficulty, told all present that he knew he was dying and asked that his doctors do no more.

George Washington

A surveyor was one of the most important jobs for the new colonies: He was the one who mapped out the resources available in sections and set boundary lines for future potential ownership. It was a grim and premature passage, though one would like to hope he took some comfort in the fact that he was dying in a room he himself had built, that he was passing into history within the shelter of his own creation.
