Wittgenstein also argues that one couldn't possibly use the words of a private language. Rather, that one is following a rule or not is to be decided by looking to see if the actions conform to the expectations in the particular form of life in which one is involved. You say: the point isn't the word, but its meaning, and you think of the meaning as a thing of the same kind as the word, though also different from the word.

Section 50 in Wittgenstein's Philosophical Investigations

He's already decided he owes Wang's cousin a beer.

Philosophical Investigations: General Summary

And criteria for his 'thinking he understands', attaching some meaning to the word, but not the right one. He invites the reader to consider a case in which someone decides that each time she has a particular sensation she will place a sign S in a diary. As long as we wish to think abstractly, we are liable to commit the sorts of errors Wittgenstein identifies.

Ludwig Wittgenstein (1889

Wittgenstein rejects the idea that can provide us with the meaning of a word.
