A hundred years ago, people were considered literate if they could write their names, a qualification that would certainly be woefully inadequate today. Gaining access to such funding usually requires that your organization have , and that you write a response to a Request for Proposals RFP from a particular state or local agency. A community need becomes apparent, funding becomes available, and a group or organization jumps in to tackle the issue.

Promoting Literacy in Our Community

If you have something valuable to offer - consulting, curriculum development services, etc. Third, volunteers, being unpaid members of the community, are credible spokespersons for the issue of literacy in general and the program in particular.
