In what follows I will examine what Stroll calls Wittgenstein's foundationalism in Section 1 and argue that Stroll's reading of Wittgenstein, though original and interesting, is misguided in important ways and so cannot be used against the views he opposes in Section 2. This paper traces the indeterminacy.

While interpreting Husserl as a foundationalist was the standard view in early Husserl scholarship, things have changed considerably as prominent commentators like Christian Beyer, John Drummond, Dagfinn Føllesdal, and Dan Zahavi have challenged this foundationalist interpretation. They promised a unique knowledge of modern society which would fulfil the radical potential of modernity. Alternatively, a post-foundational approach would consider the local and partial context of pluralized structuring processes, such as local access to child care, transport, and English language and vocational training, as well as the recruitment practices among local employers and community attitudes towards migrant women Crook, 2001a.

Crook, 2003: 13-14 Throughout his life Steve seamlessly blended the sociological study of everyday life with social theory, underpinned by an egalitarian weltanschauung that was integral to his own radical project--the mark of a scholarly, professional and very public sociologist. Biographical note John Germov is TASA President and a Senior Lecturer in Sociology in the School of Social Sciences at the University of Newcastle. In 1999 he became TASA President and was halfway through his second two-year term when he resigned in February 2002 due to illness.
