Is it positioned very high in a tree or on the side of a cliff? Nests are often built on isolated islands or along shorelines near sources of water while still being concealed from both humans and predators. For example, eggs that are very pointed on one end are designed not to roll off of a cliff or out of a flat ground nest.

One of the primary goals is to show birds listed on the ABA American Birding Association list, which includes all the native birds and the vagrants, who have been visitors or strays from other countries or seas. AOS is distinguished by its tremendous collective expertise, including eminent scientists, conservation practitioners, early career innovators, and students. Photo © Resources Identifying the owner of a nest can be tricky, but fortunately there are many good books available on the subject.

It is better to have no box at all than to allow House Sparrows to reproduce in one. Breeding bird surveys can always use volunteers who are familiar with egg identification as well, and the data from those surveys helps promote more effective conservation to protect all birds and their families. There are pictures in the middle of the book and in the descriptions, these pictures are referenced.
