Shakespeare's use of soliloquies to present Macbeth and Hamlet Essay

How does Shakespeare use soliloquies to present the characters of Macbeth and Hamlet?

A soliloquy is a comprehensive and unremiring dialogue spoken by a single person. The speaker, presenting him or herself as the sole participant, may be addressing themselves, themselves, and usually the flow of thought, which may be conscious or unconscious, directly to the audience. Shakespeare uses soliloquies to present the characters of Macbeth and Hamlet. The soliloquies are used to reveal the personal and internal thoughts of the characters at the time.

They also give the spectators a personal identification of the characters in the following ways. They will provide a thorough analysis and explanation as to how Shakespeare's soliloquies present the characters of Macbeth and Hamlet. The openings of the plays show the characters in different moods. In the first category, Hamlet is depicted as confused with life, he comes across very melancholy and thematic. At the beginning of the play, he is shown as a man who is confused about his life. He has lost his father, and has married the new king. Hamlets uncle Claudius, Hamlet is depicted as arrogant, and sceptical, full of himself and disdai of his mother for marrying him. This is contrasted from the first category, where Hamlet is shown as a man who is confused, shows as an energized, forceful, and premeditated warrior. He is seen as the bravest of

He does not have any hatred to his king, but pure adulation and reverence. Unlike Hamlet, who has very bitter feelings for King Claudius. The foremost soliloquy of Hamlet lies in the second category, where he is shown as a man who is confused about his life. His things grow in confusion. In the first category, Hamlet becomes the fact that he cannot control himself. He wishes that his physical self might cease to exist, a sense of self-control. From the first category, he is shown as a man who is confused, and ends up into a dream. Through sustained by his father's death, the larger cause of peace remains
