An Archaeology of the Sacred: Adena

The foundations of what is now the most popular professional sport in America were laid by such teams as the Canton Bulldogs and the Massillon Tigers, the Columbus Panhandles and the Youngstown Patricians, teams born out of civic pride and the enthusiasm of the blue-collar crowds who found, in the rough pleasure of the football field, the gritty equivalent of their own lives, a game they could cheer on Sunday afternoons, their only day free from work. The mound itself was encircled by a low D-shaped embankment approximately 2000 feet in circumference, which had the straight side of the D located along the north edge. A Native American people, now known as the Hopewell, lived and worked these lands, building earthworks which in some instances dwarf the ruins at Stonehenge.

Relating to Western megaliths, Stonehenge etc. This book attempts to answer the questions of why were they built, and who built them? Thus, many of these earthwork sites have hidden discoveries waiting to be revealed by modern investigators and LiDAR imagery represents one avenue for re-examining these monumental sites. Still, it remains recognizably this world.
