For example, in the previous editions of the Catalog, which listed abnormalities by chromosome and then by disease, a tedious search through each of the chromosomes was required to find all the abnormalities reported for a particular disease.

My other complaint is that excessive amounts of paper result from using the print option, especially since abstracts must be printed separately from karyotype lists. Now the entire Catalog can be searched at once, resulting in a list of references that can be exploded into detailed karyotypes, abstracts, etc.

Due to the dramatic increase of data, especially on solid tumors which typically have very complex karyotypes, the number of entries has almost doubled in the present edition.

However, the highlights include simple searches that can be performed by karyotype, disease, morphology, patient demographics, or author and complex searches using up to 6 criteria. Dr Mitelman has been compiling his Catalog of Chromosome Aberrations in Cancer since before its first publication in 1983, and quite a list it has become, now including more than 30 000 cases reported in more than 7 000 references.
