Religion, Science, and Technology

The incubator focuses specifically on funding those startups which have a long term and positive impact on the Muslim population including those that help in building products and services that empower Muslim communities and help fight extremism. This religious fervor was carried along by other leaders of America's space program.

Statement on the Use of Technology and Religious Freedom

The earliest practice of meeting in private houses was quickly outgrown, as Arab conquest spread Islam during the seventh and eighth centuries. If only we could, we would wander the earth and never leave home; we would enjoy triumphs without risks and eat of the Tree and not be punished, consort daily with angels, enter heaven now and not die. But science and technology do not have to take that path.
