Incredibly, all but one of these species are single-island endemics, and seem to follow the Pleistocene model.

biogeography

The genera belonging to this pattern often occur in what are considered to be ancient lineages , and include Magnoliaceae, Berberidaceae, Schisandraceae, Illiciaceae, Hamamelidaceae, and Saururaceae, but some more modern groups such as Rubiaceae and Asteraceae also contain a few genera with close relatives on opposite sides of the world and nowhere else. The environment that influences what animals are present in a region includes both nonliving, abiotic factors such as climate or soil composition as well as living, biotic factors such as other plants and animals. The Oceania biogeographic region is located in the Pacific Ocean, in a region referred to as Asia Pacific.
