Then passed away without hands, eyes, or elixir.

A Treatise On Poetry: Iv Natura Poem by Czeslaw Milosz

And whoever, as a child, Believed he could break the repeatable pattern Of things, if only he understood the pattern, Is cast down, rots in the skin of others, Looks with wonder at the colors of the butterfly, Inexpressible wonder, formless, hostile to art.

A Treatise on Poetry

Before the body was wrapped in bandelettes, Before wheat fell asleep in the tomb, Before stone fell silent, and there was only pity. The references and they are dense are mostly to Poland in the 20th century but the annotation separate in the back makes the poem readable. Ciò detto, invito chi volesse approfondire a leggere anche.
