Bourne looked at his newspaper, in the hope of learning something about the war, but apart from a few colourless details from the French front there was nothing: no one knew anything about it; it was like one of the blind forces of nature; one could not control it, one could not comprehend it, and one could not predict its course from hour to hour. My grandfather fought in the 2nd battle of the Somme and lived another 65 years without ever being willing to speak about it.

They had not had a bath for five weeks, but curiously enough, their skins, under their shirts, were like satin, supple and lustrous; the sweat washed out the dirt, and was absorbed with it into their clothing which had a sour, stale, and rather saline smell. The candle was flickering feebly on the verge of extinction, and presently the dugout would be in darkness again.

One sees men living, living, as it were, desperately, and then suddenly emptied of life.

. Old soldiers say that one should never take off boots and socks, after a march, until one has cooled down, and the swelling in legs and feet has vanished; bathing hot swollen feet only makes them tender.
