Why Group?

Reasons for dynamic grouping-and regrouping-of students is essential for any classroom. Grouping students based on a small group of students who have a common interest or need. Learning Center or independent work, if that, grouping is a classroom.

That said, it is imperative that students be regrouped frequently so that needs are evaluated and reevaluated. At students benefit from a variety of tasks with a wide variety of peers as possible.

Skilled teaching is the key to successful grouping. Dynamic grouping, which begins with teacher observation, supports the purposes of guided reading.

Collision with the field of psychotherapy was inevitable.

Encounter group therapy

The facilitators who were involved were: Barbara Brodley, Chuck Devonshire, Nat Raskin, Dave Spahn, Fred Zimring and myself. Self-help groups exist for the explicit purpose of offering psychological support: they help members deal with a psychological problem, a physical illness, a significant external stress, or with a stigmatized status in society for example being short, obese, gay, widowed. experience leading a group was with a heterogeneous group of patients who had been placed in group homes outside of the hospital.

Theory & Practice

I learned to get comfortable with silence. Finally the members were permitted to attend and observe the evening meetings on a trial basis. There has always been a structure on the brochure that included the community group, topic groups and small groups.

The Basic Encounter Group, Person

Since I believe this research has much relevance to group therapy I have drawn from this study often in this book , I shall describe the design and method before reporting the results.

Encounter Group

See chapter 7 for a detailed discussion of this issue. Feedback, which became an essential ingredient of all T-groups was found to be most effective when it stemmed from here-and-now observations, when it followed the generating event as closely as possible, and when the recipient checked it out with other group members to establish its validity and reduce perceptual distortion.

As the goal of the group shifted from education, in a traditional sense, to personal change, the name of the group shifted from T-group training in human relations or sensitivity training group training in interpersonal sensitivity , to one more consonant with the basic thrust of the group. Some learnings from the Warm Springs Workshops The first Person-Centered Workshop at Warm Springs, Georgia took place in 1987.

The Top Three Facilitation Challenges Every Facilitator Encounters

It was from this early experience in the psychiatric hospital that I became interested in groups and was involved as a facilitator and participant many times and in many kinds of groups over the years.
