PHYLLIS KABERRY AND ME Anthropology History and Aboriginal Australia [TOUSSAINT]

As one of his last, and youngest, British pupils she conveyed to her own students something of the admiration she felt for him. This book tells the fascinating story of two women, both anthropologists, who worked with Aboriginal people in the Kimberley region of Western Australia--one in the 1930s, the other in the 1980s and 1990s. On display until the end of April: Phyllis Kaberry (1910)

Her book was one of three focusing on the Aborigines of Australia by anthropologists during the 1930s, as well as one of few that described native women worldwide. Phyllis Mary Kaberry studied the daily habits of Aboriginal people living in the Kimberley region of Western Australia between 1934-1935, from which followed a thesis exploring the role of women in Aboriginal culture.

Kaberry's secure identity as a colonial anthropologist contrasts markedly with Toussaint's negotiated and often compromised identity as a reflexive, feminist anthropologist whose life is more intimately entwined with her Kimberley 'subjects' than Kaberry's could ever have been.
