NHS reform: competition improves hospitals, report finds

It shows that competition can be positive but it's not a simple policy.

There's room for competition in public health care

Its publication follows a period of consultation after the publication of a draft mandate, which was criticised for being too vague about its aims. A review of these studies noted that while death rates fell for all hospitals, they fell more rapidly in hospitals located in more competitive markets.

Healthcare: how competition can improve management quality and save lives

But health care in Britain as elsewhere is a political hot potato, and in Britain, any reforms which encourage competition and choice are viewed as covert attempts to privatize our revered NHS National Health Service.

NHS: What reforms does the government want to make?

It leads to a major increase in managers' pay.
