Despite the presence of elite names in philanthropic ranks, they had little ability to influence unresponsive local governments and legislatures, which continued to be primarily guided by vested interests.

The Emergence of Professional Social Science

The American Historical Association was formed in 1884; they met with the ASSA but refused to organize as a subordinate department in the ASSA. Haskell's The Emergence of Professional Social Science signaled the beginning of his distinguished career as a historian of ideas and critic of historical logic. The leadership of the departments was built on existing professional specializations; doctors chaired Health, lawyers led Jurisprudence, and college professors took charge of Education.
